

Studies in Health Humanities

Lehigh University Press's new series, "Studies in Health Humanities" is now accepting proposals for innovative, timely, and robustly theorized monographs that advance our understanding of the diverse representational and cultural practices associated with health, illness, embodiment, and care.

Established in 2020, this new series welcomes research from scholars at all career stages working in the arts, humanities, and social sciences. We want book projects that reflect the diversity of topics, issues, and communities that comprise—or invent new futures for—the field of health humanities broadly conceived.

By decentering medicine as a professional and educational context for this work, "Studies in Health Humanities" explores the fraught, often deeply ideological, lineaments of health and its proxies. We are especially interested in proposals that explore how health related issues are informed by broader structures concerning race and racialization, (neo)colonial legacies, environmental and climate concerns, science and technology, and caregiving and community work.

Above all, Studies in Health Humanities asks readers to reimagine the critical study of "health," considering what it can—or should be—in the multiply precarious conditions of the 21st century.

Call for Monographs.

Series Editors

Andrea Charise, PhD

Associate Professor

Health & Society

University of Toronto

Meet our distinguished editorial advisory board at

<https://lupress.cas.lehigh.edu/studies-in-health-humanities>

Lorenzo Servitje, PhD

Assistant Professor

English and Health, Medicine & Society

Lehigh University

To submit your proposals, please e-mail

Kate Crassons, PhD

inlup@lehigh.edu

For submission guidelines, please visit:

<https://lupress.cas.lehigh.edu/content/submission-guidelines>

